“Koreans in the USA: Immigration, Community and Identity”

Dr. Susie Woo, Assistant Professor, CSUF

In this lecture, Susie Woo will discuss the history of Korean immigration to the United States from 1900 to the present. She will focus on various factors that have directly affected the Korean American community. From the Korean War to the Los Angeles uprisings of 1992, Korean Americans have found that their identities as both Korean and American cannot be separated. Today, Korean Americans continue to navigate this dual identity in schools, the workplace, politics, and culture.

10:10 AM — 11:00 AM: Symposium #2 in Meeting Room 1

“Education in the Age of the 4th Industrial Revolution”

Dr. Suzie Oh, IKEN Online Principal / Consultant

The presenter will increase awareness of educators at all levels of this transformation called the 4th industrial revolution and its multi-faceted impact by discussing implications on Education (교육계에 시사하는 점). The world-renowned economist Klaus Schwab, the Chairman of the World Economic Forum, and the author of "The Fourth Industrial Revolution" (제 4차 산업혁명), says the fourth industrial revolution is more significant, and its ramifications more profound, than in any other period of human society.

A paradigm shift is underway how we work and communicate, how we express, and inform. The presenter will relate what the author intends to provide in his book on what it is, what it will bring, how it will impact us and what can be done to harness it for the common good. All of us have an interest in our future and are committed to using the opportunities of this revolutionary change to make the world a better place.

“Emphasizing the Teaching and Learning of STEAM/ NGSS in a Globalizing World”

Dr. Jennifer Park, Professor, USC

With the increasing number of globalizing countries and the ever-growing science technology engineering and math (STEM) relevant career fields, the implementation of inquiry-based science teaching and learning is crucial. The competitiveness of each country is rising, thus schools in the United States must make a change. In addition, as more careers revolve around STEM, the integration of the NGSS and STEAM (integrating the arts) opens up a new way of learning science through collaborative and innovative explorations of the world. Through the Crosscutting Concept approach, students are given opportunities to understand the world across domains, while simultaneously cultivating their 21st century skills. As the world continues to evolve, it's time that our way of teaching and learning science evolves as well, and the NGSS and STEAM approach steers teachers and students in the right direction.
